

House Rules

by Austin Holt | Photo by Andrew Thomas Lee | Men's Book Atlanta magazine |
May 28, 2014

The popularity of the city's newest cocktail mecca, Kimball House, is evident as I wade my way into a well-heeled and enthusiastic crowd of foodies, and I'm eager to try it all. Set in a repurposed train depot a couple of blocks from Decatur's main square, Kimball House's masculine sensibility is drawing crowds. And the towering wood-and-brass bar is king.

The ambience suggests a time when ingenuity was served in a highball glass, accompanied by a chaser of vintage charm. We'd say they don't make bars like this anymore—although, apparently, they do.

Owners Matt Christison, Bryan Rackley, Miles Macquarrie and Jesse Smith in the Square Feet Studio-designed Kimball House.